With Secretaries Baker and Daniels following President Wilson to Europe we will not have lost everything because there's Burleson.

That raise in price of Florida strawberries to 85 cents a quart holds no terrors for us, not with the Vermont sugar season about to open.

The state of West Virginia having gone into the sheep-raising industry, it is an easy guess that the state is also taking care of the dogs, for the two animals are not at all compatible.

Hoover is going to quit after July 1 to "earn a living." He has had so much experience in the last few years earning a living for millions of others that he ought to be able to earn his own.

Those Germans who are swearing fealty to the new Polish state—do they consider their citizenship a mere scrap of paper? It is a pertinent question for Poland to ask and to have answered.

Closely following the announcement that the reports concerning Brest were untrue comes the statement that conditions at Brest have improved. If Brest was all that could be desired, what need for improvement, pray?

The transfer of Field Marshal Haig from command of the British expeditionary forces to command of the British home forces probably means the prompt culmination of the war in the signing of the treaty of peace.

Most of the great clamor which attended the first arrival of President Wilson in Paris early in the winter to attend the peace conference was lacking from the second appearance of the American executive in the capital of France; and it may be taken as a token that the allies are down to the hard business in hand, the business of determining definitely the peace terms that are to be exacted from Germany and her allies. It is a good thing that the Parisians have become accustomed to the presence of President Wilson and that the period of fulsome adulation is past, and that they are now ready to receive him as a diplomat and keen thinker. The non-essentials having thus been stripped from the scene, we may confidently expect to see marked progress made in the work of framing the sections of the treaty.

The arrest of a young man in Burlington on the charge of wearing the uniform of the United States army without having the right to do so himself in that manner makes an important step toward ridding the country of a potential pest—the pest of persons who use the uniform to carry out their wrongful aims. It is not alone an imposition on the people, who, of course, are more susceptible to fakes than camouflaged, but it is also an imposition on the United States army and the vast number of honest, well-meaning men who wore the khaki without bringing any dishonor to the uniform. There is bound to be a great deal of this sort of imposition during the next few months unless prompt efforts are made to bring the practice to a halt by the rounding up of the parties who make the initial attempts to deceive the public. Vermont must do its part toward ridding the country of the pest, but in so doing we should show proper discernment and not bring action against any who have the right to wear the uniform and who are not dishonoring that uniform in any way.

PAYING COMPARATIVELY AND GETTING LITTLE.

The American casualties in the campaign in northern Russia continue to be very slight in comparison with the total casualties of the United States in the entire war and to be relatively small when the total number engaged there is taken into consideration. Not only is this reassuring from the standpoint of the value of human life but also from the standpoint of what we are getting for the expenditure of the lives, the time and the money. So far as one may judge from a casual understanding of the situation, the allies are making no headway worthy of the name in northern Russia; are, in fact, but holding their own against the hordes of Russians pressing up from the south. There is little, or no, material advantage of having these forces in Russia at all, the total being so small as to be incapable of making a determined offensive. The only possible gain to come from the maneuver seems to be to inject a little moral courage into the hearts of the Russian people who deplore the unrest and the bloodshed of the present regime but who are lacking in the courage to stand alone against the bolsheviks; but the influence of that sort cannot be very far-reaching because Russia is such a vast country that an allied army of less than one American division could wield an influence over only a comparatively small section of the country, although one may grant that in the vicinity of the allied army the influence may be powerful and inspiring. The returns from the investment are of rather a doubtful character.

MABEL SYRUP'S COLYUM

"To have a lively and not a stolid countenance."—Truth of Intercourse.

Always Time Your Urgent Calls to the Highest Thunder Storm.

When one wants to call up a doctor on the telephone, or is in a hurry to get a person before the train leaves, it is exasperating to have to wait for two gossips to get through. There have been some recent instances in point.—North Thetford item.

Colchester sighs for more gore. "We are having but little snow here this winter. We haven't had any real good slaying so far."

Bein' a Friend of Kids, We Play on the "Otherwise."

If people wish to know why the town clock stops now and then, they may know that some person, kids or otherwise, get into the top of the church and do something to stop the working of the clock. The caretaker has recently found 50 pounds of stone taken out of the box filled with granite chips which runs the minute hands.—Hardwick item.

We relay the foregoing suggestion to the Millstone quarriers who find that budding young bonanzas are all cluttered up with the refuse of a careless generation of quarriers who have gone before—some of them.

Try a Hand at Heading This One. C. H. Neal is doing jitney work. He carried four of the George Russell family to Newport. They have been sick for some time.—East Acworth item.

Each Reader Limited to One.

Spring at last has come again. Its smell is on the loam.—Unimber now, what up your pen. The Colyum needs your pome.

Smiles.

("N. H." East Brookfield). Golden days are swiftly passing. You must cherish every one. As you wander down life's pathway. Heaven's bliss has just begun.

But remember, dearest stranger. As your bark sails down the stream. That your life won't all be sunshine—Golden sunsets all a dream.

For life is what you make it. And whatever road you go. Try your best to please each other. If a happy life you'd know.

Now I won't tell of the future. And I won't dwell on the past; "Dad" and I have been all through it—This is good to try at last.

Just before you wake at sunlight. Don your sweet and dearest smile. Look it on above your collar. Just to prove you are in style.

If you're tired, cross or angry. And would like to scold awhile. Get your ivory-handled mirror—And just smile, smile, smile!

Yes, Funnier; Once in a Barber Shop and Once at the Dentist's.

George Richardson has opened a blacksmith shop on his piazza. It attracts considerable attention. Did anyone ever see a blacksmith shop in such a funny place?—North Chester item.

For the edification of The Observant Citizen in the Boston Post a Vermont contributor quotes from an historic Green Mountain tombstone as follows: Here lies cut down like unripe fruit, A son of Mr. Amos Tute. To death he fell a helpless prey, On April V and Twentieth Day, In Seventeen Hundred Seventy-seven. Quitting this world, we hope, for heaven. Behold the amazing alteration, Effected by inoculation. The means empowered his life to save, Hurried him headlong to his grave.

Green Mountain Echoes.

A portion of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hurley of North street is being repaired.—Bennington item.

George B. Gray reports he has killed 72 hogs and beef for his neighbors and all for family use.—Sheffield item.

Wilbur Montague and Mrs. E. J. Allen both write the editor asking him to say in these columns that they appreciate the valentines sent them on St. Valentine's day.

The one that gave John Davis' valuable fox hound a dose of poison better walk down the hill and settle damages and pay costs.—Dorby item.

Watch out for the evangelistic meetings and attend. With so much of sickness and sorrow all over our land we should be serious.—Coventry item.

Our town treasurer is busy these days telling would-be saloon proprietors what they must do before they get that lucrative position.—St. Johnsbury item.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Courn, who loaned their glasses to the navy, received

WE ADVERTISE---

"National Bank Protection for Your Savings." You will naturally inquire, "Why?" "Why is a National Bank any different from any other bank?"

We will answer that question in a series of advertisements which are now in the course of preparation and will be ready for publication in a few days.

The title of the series will be, "Reasons why we advertise National Bank Protection for Your Savings," and they will be published consecutively, as Reason No. 1, Reason No. 2, and so on.

In these we shall endeavor to place before you briefly some of the more important features of the National Bank Act and Federal Reserve System and how benefits may accrue to you from a connection therewith.

In the old days, bank advertising was considered undignified and banks were supposed to maintain an air of careless inconsideration toward the interests of their clients, on the theory that the public exists for the bank and any tendency on the part of the bank to explain to the public its functions and its mission, as a quasi-public corporation, was not only cheap, but a direct attack upon the best traditions of the profession.

We advertise in this paper for a number of reasons, among which are the following: We believe in our bank; we believe what we say about it; we believe that the people read what we say and at least give some thoughtful consideration to what they read; we believe that the Barre Daily Times is the best medium of reaching the thoughtful people whom we are conscientiously trying to serve.

A Man With No Business Identity

The man who hasn't an account in a bank, where his name and address and signature are KNOWN, has NO BUSINESS IDENTITY.

It actually adds to a man's dignity and standing and self-respect to be able to say: "I have an account in the Quarry Savings Bank & Trust Company. They know me."

This bank has never lost the atmosphere of personal acquaintance with and personal interest and friendliness to each one of its depositors and patrons. We would be pleased to welcome you as a patron of this bank.
